

Sir Bobby;

I have decided to launch my own drive for the saving of an Elect Remnant. To do this and aid in the support of the Pathfinders, I have decided to publish "Cities of the Deep, which is near completion. Then write, "The Ghosts of Eblis", which should be the biggest seller of all. With these two under way, I will attempt the "Deon Chronicles", which I will explain later.

I have been told, in so many words, that "The Great Roman Connection" is my project (under God) to finance its typesetting, printing and publication any way I can raise the money, thus is my aim and believe me I will do it. I am determined to help in anyway I know how and if I can finance just one Remnant or save one life, this I will do.

My education has developed by leaps and bounds and as long as I can stay alive (without shooting myself because of being Graces' husband) I intend to do my share for the overall plans.

I do hope you agree, and in view of the fact I am too damn old to find a decent job, my job now is writing to support the cause. If there is something special inbetween times, that would come first, but in the meantime, I shall continue write and publish and raise what I can. Its too damn bad at least ten Peti Si can't do the same and help where they can. I am only one and you are only one if push comes to shove, then we'll end up with just these two.

Dave

P.S. The Deon Chronicles are priceless and at first it was suggested in fun, then became more serious. Its a natural!

I will see you Sat. In the meantime, I am still racking my brains for that 51
